

The Global Hub for the Common Good, which started in September 2015 in various countries at the same time, is a think tank from the people, for the people. We call it a "think ocean" as it is an open, participative and innovative platform with people and organisations collaborating around the world to co-create a new political, economic and social ecosystem, for us and for the future generations.

It aims to foster collaboration among "new economy models" such as Economy for the Common Good (ECG), sharing economy, Circular Economy, Blue Economy, DeGrowth, social enterprises, Social and Solidarity Economy, etc.

The core of the idea is to act as a "lobby for the common good" or, preferably, as a platform dedicated to "advocate for the common good". In this way, the Global Hub for the Common Good will organise thinking activities and develop proposals of public policies and strategies aimed at co-creating a new economy and that will be presented to governments (local, regional, national) as well as to international organisations.

The Global Hub for the Common Good was launched on September 1st 2015 by Diego Isabel La Moneda, who participates in the ECG movement since February 2012. He and Alicia Trepal are steering the Hub in the beginning. Christian Felber, who helped in the setup, and other leaders of the new economy, will be part of the advisory circle.

The Community of the Global Hub is an open network of people and organisations who are interested in being informed about the Global Hub activities. Members of the Community can propose projects to the network and they can also participate in those activities proposed either by the Global Hub or by other members of the Community.
